EMS Chief David Mitchell Named 2015 IAEMSC/Intermedix Harvard EMS Fellow

The International Association of Emergency Medical Services Chiefs (IAEMSC) announced Wednesday, the selection of Arvada Fire Protection District EMS Chief David Mitchell as the 2015 IAEMSC/Intermedix Harvard Fellow.

Chief Mitchell was selected from a competitive candidate pool of EMS chief officers to participate in the Senior Executives in State and Local Government program at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

"Chief Mitchell represents the future of EMS leadership in the United States today," said Chief James L. Robinson, IAEMSC president. "Over the course of his distinguished career, Dave has demonstrated self-motivated, conscientious leadership in different roles and EMS system models, and has been successful in all of them. Chief Mitchell's commitment to the EMS profession has benefitted his organizations, teammates and his patients. His perspective and eagerness to improve EMS in his community, state and country, make Chief Mitchell an ideal candidate for the Senior Executives program."

Being designated for this fellowship is one of the highest honors for leaders in the field of Emergency Medical Services. The recipient has established longstanding contributions to the discipline of EMS and unparalleled commitments to the advancement of the EMS profession.

The fellowship is made possible through the support of Intermedix Corporation.

"We appreciate the ongoing support of our longstanding partner, Intermedix," said Rob Farmer, IAEMSC President-Elect. "We are grateful for the continuous recognition and focus on the importance of professional development opportunities for our members."

"Intermedix considers the advancement of EMS leadership a worthy endeavor," said Intermedix CEO Joel Portice. "We are proud to sponsor this scholarship, congratulate Chief Mitchell and wish him a formative experience."
